

FIGURE 1.22. Batesian and Müllerian mimicry. As an example of Batesian mimicry, palatable butterflies (middle column) mimic the warning coloration of poisonous butterfly species (left column). The moths in the right column are also unpalatable, and their similarity to the poisonous species is an example of Müllerian mimicry (pp. 475 and 506).

1.22, courtesy of Nipam H. Patel