

FIGURE 9.7. An entire plant can be produced from differentiated cells when grown under the appropriate conditions. In this example, isolated cells from a root can be grown to produce a callus, which then can form a normal plant capable of its own reproduction.