

FIGURE 17.18. The peppered moth, Biston betularia, is polymorphic for pale (top) and melanic (bottom) forms. The melanic form is more common in polluted areas, where tree trunks are darker and the paler form is more conspicuous (see p. 31).

17.18, courtesy of James Mallet, University College London