

FIGURE 19.20. Diversity in self-fertilizing species tends to be lower than in their outcrossing relatives. This example shows levels of nucleotide diversity at silent sites, π , around five genes, sampled from five species of wild tomato. The three self-incompatible species are much more diverse than the two self-compatible species.

19.20, data from Baudry E. et al., Genetics 158: 1725–1735, © 2001 Genetics Society of America